Strangely, my class is super pumped when we do a multiplication/division quiz, and are very bummed when we have to cancel it. We're working towards memorizing all of our single digit facts, and are planning to celebrate with a party when everyone has met their goal. –Katie Spear

McKinley Kids Say Howdy

McKinley Elementary School students waved and bid good wishes to passersby last Thursday in front of the school on East 14th Street.

The resource class students in grades kindergarten through fifth held signs and called out a "hello" to everyone going down the street on the final day of the Kindness Project to spread good vibes through the community.

"The students are learning that it makes people feel good and you also feel good yourself," said special education teacher Joey Chapman.

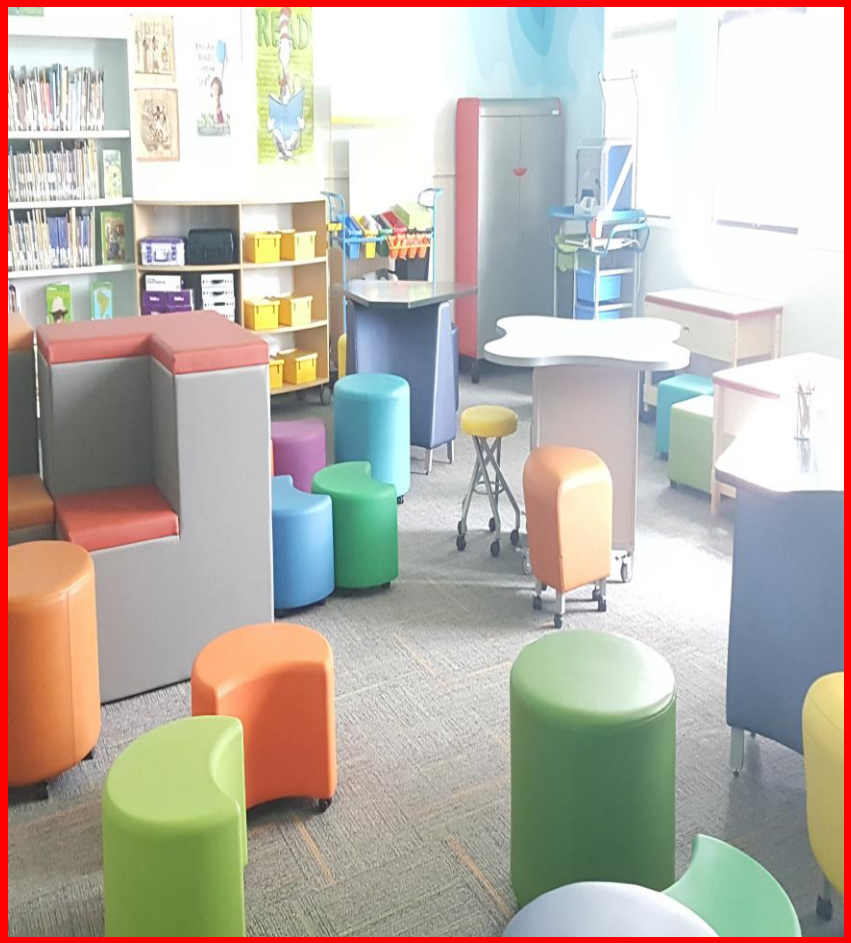

The school invited parents and other relatives and a San Leandro police officer who all took part in waving and greeting people passing by.

A grade-schooler sprang forward to retrieve an item a grownup had dropped on the sidewalk.

"You dropped your pen," he said, holding out the ballpoint pen, and putting to practice the lesson learned.
